Thousands of people lost their lives and tens of thousands were injured because of two major earthquakes around 7.8 and 7.6 magnitudes and all of its severe aftershocks, the center of which was Maraş (a city in Nord of Kurdistan) but affected many cities. Footage of the dimensions of the disaster are coming from many social media sources and the press. People who were helplessly caught in the earthquake at 4:00 in the morning and all the living beings that have been affected by the ongoing “concretization” are in the grip of death and trauma. In the middle of February and snow cold, thousands of people under the rubble are waiting and trying to be rescued through writing their addresses on various social media platforms. What every person who has a conscience needs to do today is to offer physical and material assistance to people and living beings struggling to survive under the rubble of this catastrophe. Solidarity and cooperation are key in such processes to save more lives and to take care of the injured.

As a fundamental truth, natural disasters are a part of the planet we live under, and humanity will have to cope with these disasters no matter what system it is under. Another and decisive fundamental truth is that capitalism, which is the current worldwide way of organization of humanity, adds unnatural consequences to such natural disasters. Despite all the calls from many scientists, the reason for the non-stop constructions on the earthquake fault lines is the profit-centered organization form that rises from this system. Capitalists are in constant competition with each other for profit, and in order to win the race among themselves; they deepen exploitation
